Deconstruction of the state «erosion» in the context of globalization

An original approach to explanation of problems of state «erosion» in the process of globalization, developed by the authors, is proposed. The absence of conflict between functional transnational and national state identities is specified. Features of transnational identities and their relation to the transfer of loyalties from the nation–state to supranational level are examined. Mandatory terms for transfer of loyalties, including the necessity of the existence of certain institutional mechanisms for public goods distribution at supranational level as the authority to which the loyalties of citizens can switch in the process of transnationalization of identities are indicated. It is shown, that these mechanisms successfully develop only in the interstate integration process and are not effected directly by globalization. The author’s vision of parallel existence of different forms of statehood in terms of integration and globalization is provided.

Keywords: identity, integration, international actors, transfer of loyalties, globalization.
